

Housing Instability Threatens School Success

Homeless children are far more likely than other children (even children who also are struggling with poverty) to do poorly in school, according to research conducted by Dr. Ann Masten, University of Minnesota.

